SPEAKING PRACTICE

Turn a 20-minute English room into measurable fluency progress

A practical room routine for learners who want every live conversation to produce one visible improvement.

Most learners join speaking rooms hoping that more minutes will automatically become more confidence. The better approach is to give each room one measurable job: one pronunciation pattern, one grammar habit, or one conversation behavior to improve.

Before entering a room, write a short target sentence that you expect to use. During the room, use it naturally at least twice. After the room, compare what you said with the correction cards and rewrite the sentence once.

The goal is not to speak perfectly for twenty minutes. The goal is to leave with one phrase you would say better tomorrow. That small loop compounds much faster than unstructured practice.
